Some lawsuits present unique or difficult challenges above and beyond ordinary litigation. Complexity can arise from the dollar value of the case as well as from the nature of the procedural or substantive issues involved. Mitchell Williams' lawyers are frequently called upon to assist other firms or to handle complex litigation in a variety of substantive fields.

Members of the firm's Business Tort & Insurance Defense team handle bad faith claims such as health and disability claims, fire and arson, large tornado losses, construction defects, credit life policies and employment practices on behalf of a range of insurers. Our attorneys have successfully defended brokers and agents named as parties in extra-contractual bad faith lawsuits.
