Madeline McCulloch concentrates her legal practice on litigation, offering comprehensive support in client representation across a wide spectrum of disputes. A recent magna cum laude graduate from the University of Arkansas School of Law, she brings substantial practical experience from her clerkships, which have equipped her with a strong foundation in legal analysis and trial preparation. During her time in law school, Madeline exemplified leadership in her role as Chair of the Board of Advocates, managing advocacy competition operations and strengthening relationships with alumni. She also gained skills in trial advocacy through participation in Phi Alpha Delta National Trial Competition and William H. Sutton Barrister's Union Trial Competition.
