The Arkansas Journal of Social Change and Public Service ("Journal") announced it is accepting manuscript submissions for Volume 15, Issue 2, focusing on environmental and technology law.

The Journal is a publication associated with the Bowen School of Law at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock.

The call for papers indicates that the Journal will welcome papers addressing a wide range of legal perspectives. However, specific areas of interest are stated to include but are not limited to:

- Climate change
- Environmental justice
- Energy and infrastructure
- Artificial intelligence
- Privacy and data governance
- Cybersecurity
- Intellectual property
- AI data centers
- Sustainability
- Emerging regulatory challenges
- Interdisciplinary and comparative perspectives

The papers will be published in the Journal's Fall issue, and the goal is to receive first drafts by August 15th.

Questions regarding submission process can be addressed by contacting the Journal's Executive Editors at kecorjay@ualr.edu or bgarcia@ualr.edu.

The Journal was founded in 2011 and describes itself as a vehicle for identifying and addressing pressing societal issues through scholarship and dialogue. Issues examined include those at the intersection of public policy, public interest, academia, and the law, with the goal of raising awareness and fostering discussion on topics that may not always receive attention in traditional scholarly publications.
